

INTERNATIONAL SOLIDARITY

We are studying in an international business school. And all of us know how important international experience is to our future career development. That's why we are introducing a concept which is rarely thought of: the international solidarity.

What is it about?

Solidarity refers to the notions of brotherhood, mutual assistance and sharing. International solidarity refers to the same ideas applied across cultures and borders. It promotes sharing, tolerance, respect, exchange, etc. This implies going to the areas in need, joining other volunteers, and contributing to the development projects – managed by local partner-organizations – in various fields such as education and culture. The so-called areas are numerous, ranging from developing countries to wealthy ones.

Why should I get involved in these projects?

And why not? By taking part, you will travel and discover new environments, get interested in foreign cultures and learn beautiful languages. You will see the world-face that our current living-conditions have been hiding from you.

As well, you may feel that since you started university studies, everything has been going too fast. Remind you, at the last year of high school, you didn't even know what kind of jobs you aimed for. Nowadays, you are already on your way to a master's degree in business administration! And you are seeing your first job coming! Why not take a break, leave these living environment and travel to see how other people are considering their lives and the world? You may find out what kind of person you really are and change your perception of your life and the world.
